In 2011, Libya faced a civil war sparked by protests against Muammar Gaddafi’s regime. The international community quickly responded by investigating potential war crimes and crimes against humanity. Efforts were made to encourage a ceasefire and dialogue among the conflicting parties, emphasizing the need for a peaceful resolution. Sanctions, including an arms embargo, travel bans, and asset freezes, were imposed to pressure the regime to halt hostilities and engage in negotiations. Additionally, a special envoy facilitated mediation between the conflicting sides to promote a peaceful settlement. These combined actions played a crucial role in addressing the crisis. The initial steps taken demonstrated a commitment to peaceful resolution and accountability. (source: un.org)
